good name, without acquaintance, but with a wife to provide for. A legislative investigation, in which he secured employment through the Democratic Governor, Joseph A. Wright, brought him into notice. The ability that he displayed won for him the highest praise of lawyers and laymen. From that time his abilities were fully occupied. He soon acquired the reputation of cases, became an expert examiner of witnesses, discussed legal questions in written briefs or oral arguments with convincing logic, and became one of the leaders of his profession as an advocate. It was inevitable that he should drift into politics. With many young men of generous inpulses he joined the Republican party, and with superior oratorical ability he soon became known as one of the best and most fearless Republican speakers. It amazed the Democrats of the State to see him challenge Mr. Thomas A. Hendricks to "divide time;" but it was afterward declared by the chairman of the meeting that he had "never heard a man skin an opponent as quickly as Ben Harrison did Hendricks that day." In 1860 he was a candidate for Reporter of the Supreme Court, and in the Lincoln campaign of that year he was elected. He cared little for the office, except for the opportunity that it gave him to continue in the study of his profession at an increase of income.

The outbreak of the rebellion soon The outbreak of the rebellion soon dragged him from the life of the citizen to that of a soldier. Governor Morton in July, 1862, asked him to assist in recruiting a regiment under the President's call for 300,000 three-year troops. He received the first commission for the Seventieth Regiment, and as Second Licutenant inspired such enthusiasm wherever he went that he soon raised Company A, was made Captain, helped to fill up the other companies of the regiment, and in less than a month had completed it, and was at its head as Colonel, ready to go to the front. Governor Morton signified a willingness to accept his resignation if he chose to remain at Morion signification if he chose to remain at home and hold his civil office. But Colonel Harrison preferred the military service. Once chosen, he devoted himself to that career with all his ability. Colonel Harrison preferred the initially service. Once chosen, he devoted himself to that career with all his ability. He served through Kentucky and Tennessee up to January, 1894, when his regiment was assigned to the First Brigade of the Third Division of the Twentieth Army Corps. His services had been highly honorable to him up to this time, but he had not yet reached his highest honors. He was ordered to lead the assant at Resaco on May 15, 1864. The duty was gallantly performed, his command rushing irresistably over the enemy's terrible lines, and capturing both lines and gains. At Peach-tree Creek, while commanding his brigade, his soldlerly qualities drew from his commanding officer, General "Jo" Hooker, the most enthusiastic praise. On the battle field he declared that he would make Colonel Harrison Brigadier General for his part in the fight. And he wrote a dispatch to Secretary of War Stanton in which he recommended his promotion, complimented his brigs and for its discipline, praised him for his wisdom, foresight, and valor, and advised his promotion as a just recognition of his services and martial accomplishments. He served through the surrender of Johnston, and with his command participated in the final review of the Union forces at Washington before the great army once more became a part of the general with a basic to the dealer and tell him you ton't want it. advised his permotion as a just accompition of his services and martial accompition of his services and martial accomplishments. He served through the war to its close. He took part in the series and battle of Nashyille, was at the surrender of Johnston, and with his command participated in the final review of the Union forces at Washington before the great army once more became a part of the command body of citizens.

While he was a away from Indiana, the Supreme Court, Democratic in composition, declared vacant the office of Surreme Court Reporter, to which Harrison had been elected. Another reporter was elected. In the fall of 1864, after Atlanta had fallen, he took his first leave of absence. The State convention had nominated bim again for the place from which he had been ousted, Reaching home, he devoted himself so effectively to the work of the canvas for the thirty days accorded him that he was elected for another term. He declined a re-election in 1868, and until 1876 devoted himself diligently to the practice of his profession. In 1876 he was made the candidate for Governor, after he had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and the candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after another candidate had been nominated and had declined to run, and after ano

His colleague, Senator Voorhees, in discussing a revenue reduction hil, had made a characteristically loose and reckless oration, laving stress upon some phrases in which he had ridiculed the Republicans for taking the tax off persumery and cosmetics. Senator Harrison had waited for just this speech. When Senator Voorhees concluded, Senator Harrison began, and stepping down into the arena in front of the desks, and approaching the Democratic rison again resumed the practice of his profession at Indianapolis. Personally Governor Harrison is somewhat under the average height; but his straight, strong figure, soldierly bearing, and easy dignity of manuer make him a noticeable person among men. His hair is very fair, and his face is clothed with a blond beard in which there are no streaks of gray. One term in the Senate did not encrust him with the veneering of Senatorial reserve. He was and is one of the most approachable of men, ready to talk upon all public subjects freely, and having something to say on most subjects that it is worth while to hear. As an orator he was one of the best of the Senate, speaking clearly, without fatigue, and with a voice of silvery resonance and great penetration. Major General Harrison, an English ancestor, bore arms with Oliver Cromwell, and rose with him to prominence in the Revolution. well, and rose will in the Revolution. It fell to his lot to sign the death-warrant of Charles I., and after the Restoration he paid the penalty for this act, being hanged October 13, 1660. Benjamin Harrison, the first descendent of Cromwell's General who appears in American history, was a member of the Virginia House of Burgesses, later a delegate to the Colonial Congress. a signer of the Declaration of Independence, three times elected Governor of Virginia, and a member of the convention that ratified the Constitution. His son was General William Henry Harrison, whose honorable career as a soldier and statesman gulminated in his election to the Presidency in 1840, to he followed by his death in the White House one month after his inauguration.

The stock market to-day came as near stagnation in point of activity as it is possible, the total number of shares sold for the two bours being only 35,29e. The opening was firm to strong with a generally nopeful feeling. Chicago was a seller and afterwards the traders joined in the movement, because of the coming strike of from workers at Pittaburgh. The transactions were untirely of a professional character, and there was no news of any kind beyond that mentioned to affect values in any way. The dealings dwindled away to the smallest amount in the last hour, and the close was intensely dull and heavy to weak at about the lowest prices reached. The result of the day's transactions is to leave prices fractionally lower than yesterlay, though a few stocks show small advances.
